Silent Partners.

"Don't you ever speak to me again," said Mrs. Benton, "and I will never speak to you from this hour on."

John Benton and his wife Mary had been married nearly a quarter of a century at the time of this violent outbreak, and had hitherto been active and talkative matrimonal partners. They lived in the country upon their own little farm, and though they had not always held the most absolute harmony of opinion, their devotion to each other and their unity upon all the essential matters of life were undisputed. It was only in the infinitesimal objects of life that they clashed. They had, together, met and surmounted great obstacles in their common path, but they removed rocks only to stumble over a pebble. They had, united, hewn their way through an almost interminable forest of difficulties, to be stopped in their onward career by some insignificant bramble of contention. They had safely stemmed the flood of adversity, yet were occasionally almost overcome by some petty stream of wrangling that flowed from the lips of either. And finally the contemptible little rivulets that had been constantly trickling for so many years in so many different ways had seemingly met to form a great vortex in which they were doomed to be swallowed up. Those hitherto active and voluble tongues were about to rust in idleness, at least at home. They were resolved to become henceforth Silent Partners.

John Benton accepted the situation without replying, for what was there to be said? Had he not been commanded to refrain forever from speaking to his wife?"

The first night of the self-enforced silence in the Benton cottage was awkward. The usual curtain lecture was omitted, and such a death like, desolate stillness prevailed that sleep was out of the question. About midnight the awful silence had so worked upon the nerves of John Benton that unable to endure it longer, he arose, and going down-stairs, soon returned with the old clock, which was not only a loud ticker, but also a cheerful striker. He must have something for company that would appeal to his sense of hearing, or perish with loneliness. John started and stopped as he was about to place this new companion upon the bureau; he thought he heard a sound proceed from under the bed-coverings not unlike a smothered laugh.

The morrow brought its tribulations, following one another in close and annoying succession. Mrs. Benton, finding the situation too irksome to be borne without some new excitement to replace the lost art of speech, determined upon a revolution of the whole household.

John Benton, coming in about noon from the field, at once saw that something unusual was under way. He knew that his wife was just then out at the barn, so he crept upstairs to ascertain the nature of the operations. There was a scene of chaos indeed. It would seem as though this energetic woman had decided, contrary to her usual wisdom, to begin at every room in the house at once.

And it certainly looked as though order could not be restored to even one of these wrecked apartments by sunset. Now John was always a kind-hearted man, and noticing the carpets rolled up it occurred to him that here was a clear case in which he could anticipate the wishes of his poor tired, tongue-tied wife. With him to think was to act, so out went the carpets upon the lawn; but scarcely had he finished his task before he heard his wife tugging and panting on the stairs, trying to get the carpets into the house again, and back into their respective rooms. He had evidently been mistaken, and he hastened to make amends by restoring the carpets to their former places; then, from fear of doing more harm than good, he stood aside, and allowed destiny to take its course. The labors of the day pressed heavily upon Mrs. Benton, and towards its close she essayed the dumb language of pantomime to obtain from her husband some help in getting a room ready for occupancy before bed-time. But either John's perception of this language was somewhat obtuse, or else Mrs. Benton's manner of using it was imperfect, for she was compelled to abandon it as useless, after going through many fantastic contortions of her body, and many facial expressions that filled John with astonishment. She at last wound up with a look of disgust so full of meaning that the poor fellow he read in it plainly enough, "I should think any fool could understand that." But John was not the fool to comprehend it, so pantomime had to be given up.

Many ludicrous blunders were the inevitable consequence of this abandonment of the customary mode of conveying thoughts; the double orders given to the groceryman and the butcher, the duplicate purchases of all sorts of odds and ends, led to much confusion and vexation in the Benton household.

John Benton had promised his wife, previous to the unhappy occurrence that had placed this gulf of silence between them, money to purchase a new dress for herself. One day he laid a roll of bills upon the table, and called her attention to it. She nodded assent, and John was satisfied that her memory was good for anything that related to her personal adornment. But what was his surprise and disgust when she returned from town and gave him the grocer's receipted bill!

One morning, upon John's return from the city, he astonished his wife by bringing with him a lad, whom he ushered into the kitchen with the remark:

"Now, Teddy, this is your home, and that is your mistress, Mrs. Benton, and whatever she requires of you, you are to do, of course."

John Benton, in the utter loneliness of his heart, and fearing lest his unused tongue should become paralyzed by this prolonged inactivity, or that he should lose his voice for want of practice, had, like Robison Cruso, brought home a little man Friday to talk to, and also to use as a mouthpiece for himself and wife. Things now went on with less blundering and uncertainty, for Teddy was made the medium for conveying the thoughts or wishes alternately from one to the other. But John monopolized so much of the boy's companionship in his new-found delight at giving vent to speech, that Mrs. Benton still led a rather lonely life.

"But," thought she, "what is sauce for the goose ought to be sauce for the gander, and I will have a girl Friday before the week is out, in order to strengthen and improve my vocal powers."

And so she did. Never was there a more astonished man than was John Benton on the evening that he came chattering with Teddy into the kitchen and stopped upon the threshold to listen to the irrepressible flood of female conversation that was being poured forth within. Indeed, so intent was was Mrs. Benton on unburdening her long-pent-up feelings that she did not notice the transfixed figure of her husband standing there till her startled ear caught the remark:

"Well, Teddy, this is a surprise party, isn't it?"

"Those, Maggie," said Mrs. Benton, "are the other half of this family."

It was about this time that John communicated to his wife the mistake in regard to the dress money and refunded to her the amount. She in turn, through her mouth-piece, intimated to him that his company and services in driving the family horse would be acceptable to take her to the city to purchase her gown.

To this he readily assented, as he also had business in the the city. They had agreed upon a plan of communication before leaving home, through a small slate such as dumb people use among those who do not understand their language.

On arriving at the gorgeous store they manifested an awkward uneasiness, and a few minutes before entering, this mute business in public was evidently not relished by either of the parties. But finally they entered. Mrs. Benton was greeted by a polite salesman. She made known her wishes and soon a great mass of various fabrics of all colors was spread out for her inspection. She asked the price of a piece of a particular shade that she fancied, she priced another piece of a different color, and during all this time she was vainly trying in some indirect way to get an expression of opinion from her husband as to his preference. But she ignominiously failed. Her face grew hot and excited. She was not on speaking terms with her husband, and yet she loved him well enough to refuse to purchase or wear a dress the color of which he might not approve. She shrank from the humiliation of the slate, but finding there was no alternative but violation of her vow, she produced it and asked him the simple question upon which her heart was set. For answer he simply put his hand on the piece of her choice, and she smiled pleasantly as she turned to the spruce and accommodating salesman. The latter, taking in the situation at a glance with the keen eye of an expert in humanity, supposing it was of course a question of dollars and cents she was propounding to her unfortunate deaf and dumb husband, rapidly wrote upon a bit of paper, "Splendid goods; wear like iron; never fade; very cheap; fifty per cent. below cost price; never get another chance like it," which paper he placed in the hands of the astonished Mr. John Benton.

"What's this?" he exclaimed, looking alternately from the clerk to his wife. "'Pears to me you're in a hurry with your bill, young man."

Never was there a more astounded salesman behind a counter than this. And his chagrin equalled his surprise. With a confused apology, which seemed to include something about "deaf mute," he tried to make amends by renewed courtesies and attentions to Mrs. Benton, who was plunged in misery. It is hard to conceive of a woman so wretched who had just come into possession of a new and handsome outfit.

John Benton's special business in town was to pay an insurance premium, and he and his wife called together at the palatial office of the company. While waiting their turn to become accommodated, John and his wife stood near the door. As he was looking over a city directory to pass away the time, his wife, being seized with a new idea wrote it out, and handed him the fatal slate. John for convenience in reading the sentence on the slate, put the directory under his arm, whereupon, just at that moment, the pompous secretary of the insurance company came in from the street, and taking in the situation with the keenness of sight and astuteness that characterize the discerning city man, from a dry-goods salesman up to a high official in an insurance company, he touched the fated John upon the arm, and pointed to a card upon the wall on which the legend ran thus, "No beggars, peddlers, or book agents allowed to pursue their avocations here." It was some time before John or his wife could comprehend the connecting link between themselves and that card; but when, with the mild assistance of the officiel dignitary, it dawned upon them that John was mistaken for a book agent, Mrs. Benton turned purple with rage, and in explaiing their business there did not spare the feelings of the wretch who had given another sting to her wounded pride. But John was disposed to laugh it off, and still further added to the confusion of those present by transacting his business in good audible English.

It remainssto this day a mystery to the unfortunate dry-goods clerk as well as to the non-plussed secretary what could induce a couple to converse together on a slate who could use such forcible and intelligible language to others.

After their unfortunate experiences in the city the unhappy pair began to weaken a little in their resolution. Not only were their mutual interests suffering in various ways by reason of this very imperfect means of communication, but as their love for one another was strong and genuine, in spite of the foolish embargo they had put upon their speech, they chafed under the irksome restraint of a protracted silence. While they were both revolving in their minds plans that might lead to a way out of the difficulty, fate came to their rescue, and saved them from themselves, though in an unexpected and painful way.

Upon the anniversary of their silence John Benton and Teddy were busy in the hay field, and as a storm was threatening, Mrs. Benton and Maggie came to their rescue with their rakes. A large load was on the wagon, and Mrs. Benton and Maggie volunteered to arrange the hay upon the cart as John threw it up to them. John had just started to lead the horse to another part of the field, when, on looking up at the load, he saw his wife still standing. He motioned to her to sit down, but she failed to notice his signal, and the horses started; at the same time John saw her lunge backward and slide, head-foremost, from the load. Before he could stop the team and get to her, she had struck the ground, upon her head. With a faint gasp, and with semi-conscious but dazed cry, she said, "Don't you ever speak—"

"Hush!" said the scared man; "for God's sake, Mary don't talk that way now!"

In another moment she lay unconscious in his trembling arms, pale and still as death.

"Oh!" exclaimed the unhappy man. "if I had only screamed to her to sit down instead of trusting to that confounded pantomime, perhaps it would not have happened."

Taking her up tenderly in his strong arms, he carried her to the house, and all the way into her own deaf ears he poured out his love and lamentations; his tongue was loosened, and seemed to be trying to make up for lost time. And as he bathed her head, and tried to kiss back the color and to coax into action that long-silent voice, he moaned. "What would I not give now to hear her talk to me again! It would be bliss to hear her scold even. Perhaps—perhaps," and he shuddered as he said it, "she may never speak again!"

The new-mown hay threatened by the coming storm was nothing to him now. He neither knew nor cared whether the sky was black or blue. All was black about him, and there was only one object that he could see. Even Teddy, who had shared his confidence, and Maggie, who had been the solace of his poor wife during the dull blank year that had just closed in such a tragical manner, were obnoxious to him by their very presence. He saw in them only the go-betweens that served to keep up this odious silence.

"If I had never brought Teddy here, perhaps we should have spoken long ago," he muttered; "for it was getting to be pretty hard to keep still any longer about that time."

He was just thinking seriously about sending for a doctor, when he felt a pressure upon the hand that had all this time clasped one of his wife's, and looking into her face, he saw with delight that her eyes were wide open and bent upon him.

"My dear Mary! thank God!" he said, as he bent down and kissed her pale face, while the tears dropped from his cheek upon hers. "Speak to me, Mary."

She gazed around her upon the scene of masculine havoc for a few moments; the wet cloths, the blankets, the camphor and arnica bottles, the flooded floor, and then at the face of the man beside her. In the latter she saw only intense misery and unfeigned contrition, but she could not resist the impulse, in spite of the accident, in spite of John's sufferings of mind, to test him still farther. She slowly raised her limp hands, and with the forefinger of the right she began to trace upon the palm of the hand, at the same time directing a questioning look at her husband. "Good heavens!" thought he, "can it be posible that she has been paralyzed by her fall, and is now truly and in earnest dumb?" But a glance at her face dispelled that horrible thought. She was smiling, but she still continued to write with her finger. Simple, honest, John Benton caught her meaning then, and exclaimed, almost petulantly, "The slate, Mary? Confound the slate! No more deaf and dumb language for me. One word from you now is worth more to me than a year's chatter of these young ones; besides, it will do you good, my dear."

"John, I really believe you are speaking to me," said his wife, while tears of joy came to her eyes.

John Benton bent close to her face, and kissing her again, said, "Yes, Mary, I am going to keep it up, too, from this time on. for—." And here he put his mouth to her ear, and whispered a few words that, in spite of her tears, and pain, made her laugh outright. He had whispered, "No beggars, peddlers or book agents allowed in the Benton Cottage hereafter.

WOMEN WHO HOLD OFFICE.

The Field of Woman's Work in Washington.

Female Clerks and their Duties—History of the Employment of Women by the Government.

Foreigners who visit the public departments for the first time, says a Washington letter to the New York Herald, are surprised at the number of women who occupy desks and are called clerks. It is but a few years since a woman was thought fit to be a clerk in the State department; now there are a dozen or more on the rolls of its clerical force. Much of the work in a diplomatic office is perfunctory. Letters must be copied, records made up and often duplicates of dispatches of no public value have to be prepared for information in official circles. All this can be done as readily by woman as by men. In the composition of instruction to ministers and consuls, of course, only the experienced heads of divisions are employed.

Though women had been employed elsewhere by thousands, there was at least a recognition of the fact that the State department was not superior to the United States Supreme court, for a woman had been recognized by that body as worthy to be "of counsel" and to appear before this most high judicial body, attired even as the judges themselves, in a black silk gown. The question is naturally asked, Do women make good clerks? Are they as competent, as skillful, as reliable as the male clerks! The experience of those who have been long in civil service is that women do not average in their work as well as men. This is not only true of the kind of labor but of the actual amount performed. There is in the Treasury department one lady who gets $1,800 per annum—that is, she rates as a fourth class clerk. There are in this department altogether nearly one thousand women—all intelligent, and many of them have been in public service for years. But they seldom rise above the first class, or a $1,200 clerk. Many of them are graded as copyists, receiving but $900 a year, and there is not the slightest prejudice against their promotion. It would be invidious in such an article to specify particular talent. There are ladies in all the departments of the government who receive the same pay as their male associates, none higher than $1,800 a year; a few at $1,600, more at $1,400 and a majority at $1,200.

The first employment given to woman by the government was during the war, when paper money had to be substituted for gold and silver. Redemption of the mutilated notes issued by the government and national banks made the services of women indispensable. The mass of filthy and torn currency returned to the treasury for redemption made the employment of dexterous figures a necessity, and none were found so apt at handling it as the women employed in the bureau of engraving and printing, and in the office of the United States treasurer. The counting of the new and old fractional currency gave employment to hundreds of women; and as they became accustomed to the accurate form of the genuine notes, it was next to impossible to deceive their practised eye and delicate touch, so that a counterfeit note had no earthly show of redemption. Not only was this true of the fractional currency, legal tenders and national bank notes, but of government bonds and the thousands of coupons that had first to pass the inspection of women before they could be credited to government account. It is in the bureau of engraving and printing and the United States treasurer's office that the greater number of females are employed. At the government printing office there is a large number working in the folding and press rooms, and bindery. There skill is more of a mechanical than a clerical kind. This is also true of the majority of the women employed in the bureau of engraving and printing, yet there are women whose services are graded as high as those of men.

In the war department, excepting the quartermaster general's bureau, the the gentle voice of a woman is seldom heard. So, too, in the navy department there is a dearth of women.

Whether there is a prejudice against women being employed in the war and navy departments does not appear, except that they are not employed; but the postoffice and interior departments make up for it. In the dead letter office a number of women experts are engaged whose ability to make sense out of nothing is daily demonstrated. In fact, the officials say the office could not be run without them. There is a certain kind of patience that is peculiar to the fair sex, necessary to decipher what only the stupid or ignorant writer could possibly explain. But they do it. Their explanation makes the direction on letters, which intelligent and very experienced clerks could not make out, as plain as copperplate. But it is only women who have genius who can discover where a letter ought to go; the natural sympathy between their nature and desire makes the cleverest of experts in putting missent or badly directed letters of packages on the way to the owner. Visitors to the dead letter office say that the greatest curiosity there is the system by which a "gone wrong" package is put in the path of right. The industry required to convert an apparently meaningless superscription into a direction which a strong-minded man can understand and a postoffice clerk obey is solely the possession of women clerks in the dead letter office.

Are they all young? Are they middle aged? Are they spinsters? these four thousand female employes in the government offices? All of them old enough to vote, and at that matter have arrived at a marriageable age. For the most part the women are widows or maidens many of them are the main support of aged or infirmed parents. They come from all parts of the country, but mostly from the North and New England States. Are they pretty? Well, some of them are, but as a general thing the beautiful women don't stay clerks very long. Some stunning young man who is clerk in the office where the pretty one is employed makes up his mind to marry, and married women are, with very few exceptions, ruled out of government service. To one familiar with department life but very few changes can be noticed from year to year in the ranks of the women clerks.

Few die, none resign, and a small percentage only drop out on account of matrimony. The interior department perhaps affords the finest field for women clerks. Probably three-fourths of the women have been found especially expert as typewriters, and the correspondence of the interior department and its bureaus is sent out in printed form. It not only makes it easy for the checking clerks to scan the matter, but saves in bulk and letter paper beside.

The patent office necessarily has a great mass of business which is matter of record, hence there is scarcely room in this overcrowded bureau, where the rattle of the typewriter is not heard from morning until night, the fair fingers of the operator making the machine a very thing of life. A woman has not yet been appointed an examiner, but it is certain that one-half the labor performed in the patent office is done by women.

The attorney-general has found that woman is a very useful assistant in keeping the records of the department of justice, and if he desired, he could even employ a woman to write legal opinions, for such a one lives in this city, whose ability no one will question. At present, however, the female employes are mainly occupied in copying the opinions of the learned jurists who are called assistants to the attorney-general.

A Startling Confession.

'Sir,' said the business manager of a Willmington daily paper, coming with drooping head into the presence of the proprietor, 'I have a startling confession to make to you.'

'What can it be?' asked the proprietor, trembling with excitement that could not be concealed.

'Oh, sir, spare me,' said the business manager. 'I know I have done wrong but the temptation was very great. I have spent the year's profits of this paper for my own private use.'

'What have you done with the money? gasped the proprietor, as he clutched the back of a chair to steady his quivering frame.

'I—I—' answered the business manager, as his head fell lower and lower upon his breast and a blush of shame came to his cheek—'I—I have spent it for two plates of ice-cream.'

Condensed Sermons.

True wealth consists in health, vigor, and courage, domestic quiet, concord, public liberty, plenty of all that is necessary, and contempt of all that is superfluous.

The erection of Christ's kingdom is purity in His church, and thrusts out the outward pomp and magnificence that we naturally like so well. His kingdom of grace can not be in the soul without the forsaking of all our accustomed and pleasing ways of sin. But they who know the excellency of His kingdom are well content to forego all that suits not with it. Thus, that His kingdon of glory may come, the world must be burnt up; and that we particularly may come to it, we must pass through death. But it is worth all.

A patent medicine manufacturer advertises for bald men, who are willing to have advertisements painted on the tops of their heads, "for a high pecuniary recompense."

Folger's Successor.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—Judge W. Q. Gresham, postmaster general, received a telegram from the president after 11 o'clock last night informing him of his appointment to the secretaryship of the treasury. He immediately qualified and sent to the president his resignation as postmaster general. At 1.40 o'clock this morning Mr. Gresham went to the treasury department with Secretary Chandler. His appointment from the president was given to him by Mr. O. L. Pruden, assistant private secretary to the president, and his commission by Third Assistant Secretary of State A. A. Adee. The two assistant secretaries of the treasury, French and Coon, were present and tendered him their congratulations. The new secretary will leave here this afternoon to consult with the president. Under the law First Assistant Postmaster General Hatton becomes acting postmaster general for ten days.

Three Questions.

Why is it that at present so many manufacturers are idle, business depressed, wages low and thousands of laborers out of work, when we have had a republican tariff for the last 24 years?

What is the reason that real estate only sells at one half its value and that the price of the finest farms is barely up to what the buildings alone cost, while we enjoyed a republican protective tariff for 24 years?

Can you tell why farmers who are not entirely free of debt can hardly maintain an existence and in spite of abundant crops can not meet expenses, and at the same time we enjoyed a republican tariff for the last 24 years?

BLAINE is a "Great Dodger." He managed to dodge the Prohibition amendment in Maine—but he can't dodge the Mulligan and Fisher letters.

Always doing his Duty.

The principal motive of Governor Cleveland in all positions of life always was to do his duty, not like some men with the same opportunities, to fill his pockets and live on the fat of the land, but in a conscientous and unselfish way. As a son and brother, as mayor, as sheriff, as governor he never shirked his duty and if elected president he will not fail to act in accordance with this strong sense of duty, and will never forget that he is the servant of his people. By their fruits ye shall know them.

THAT agreement which Mr. Blaine wished to be made between his chief organ, the New York Tribune and the Labor Union of that city was "no good." Mr. Reid, the editor, in answer to the respectful request of the Union to modify certain points in his proposition, shamefully snubbed that body and in consequence Mr. Geary, president of the Printer's Union, when asked what action the Labor organizations would now take in the matter, said that they would "fight the Tribune with all their might, and unless the Republican party boycotts the Tribune we will fight the Republican candidates with all the workingmen of the country at our back to help us. We have gone into the fight to stay, and on November 5 Mr. Blaine and Mr. Reid will discover the mistake they have made."

GROVER CLEVELAND has no desire to make a travelling show of himself, like his magnetic opponent, the Plumed Knight. Cleveland stays in his office and does his duty. The decent class of voters opprove of his action and will cast their vote for the honest and dutiful governor. The difference is—Blaine seeks the office, while the office seeks Cleveland.

TAMMANY IN THE FIELD.

A Straight Ticket Nominated by the Convention.

Kelly Makes a Speech Declaring that Tammany will Support the Democratic Ticket.

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—Tammany hall held its county convention to-day and nominated a straight ticket. The hall was crowded and John Kelly was greeted with extraordinary enthusiastic applause. In calling the convention to order Kelly said: "So far as I understand you propose to hold this convention as representatives of the democratic party without regard to other organizations. [Loud applause.] Before, when we conferred with other bodies we bartered away our rights, in one instance by means of a lottery in a hat. Our party has lived through good and evil reports and to-day stands preeminently high before the people. I mean the people who are willing to look at both sides and decide according to their consciences. Truth is truth in the light of heayen and will prevail. Gentlemen, in selecting your candidates remember the words of Thomas Jefferson: 'Is he honest? Is he capable? if so he will do to send before the people.' The world may say what it pleases about us. We believed that the nomination at Chicago was an unwise one but Grover Cleveland is the nominee of the Democratic party and we will not separate from the party we have all known and loved so long. We shall give Cleveland and Hendricks a full, fair and honorable support."

Young MacVeagh on Cleveland.

Franklin MacVeagh's Interview in N.Y. Times.

It seems to me that Cleveland's sense of a public office being a public trust is just about perfect. In conversing with him on public matters you do not seem to be listening to a politician or a candidate for office and loose sight of the fact that you are talking to a man who will probably be our next President in his interesting and instructive ideas on the subject of good government. His political convictions are as firmly grounded and clear cut as possible and every letter, even speech or other utterance bearing on public matters proves how consistant he is in living up to those convictions. His idea of his duty to the public whom he serves transcends every other consideration. I consider Cleveland the best fitted man for the occasion of any nominee of either party since Abraham Lincoln. So we Independents have not only the motive for putting him against our own candidate, which is a sufficient motive, but the desire of supporting a man who we feel is in every way fitted for the position. There is an augean stable to be cleaned out. Cleveland is the Hercules of present public life.

The Prohibitionists in Convention.

The Prohibition county convention met on Thursday morning Sept. 25, at 10:30 o'clock in the audience hall of the Y. M. C. A., about 15 persons being present. Organization was effected by the choice of Rev. J. M. Graham, for President, W. W. Reese, Secretary, and Cleyan Dinges, assistant secretary. The following nominations were made: Associate Judge, Henry Spotts, of Union township; Assembly, Wm. H. Musser, of Milesburg, and G. W. Currin, of Centre Hall.

Mrs. Reese, State lecturer of the W. C. T. U., of Ohio, was called on for a speech and responded in a vigorous and entertaining manner. She said that the W. C. T. U., which society she represents, is essentially non-political. The members are the wives and sisters of Democrats and Republicans, and it would injure the cause for which they work for some of their members to ally themselves with a third party. They must elevate public sentiment. If public sentiment were on a level with themselves there would be no occasion for their existence. Individually, however, she is a prohibitionist, and believes the cause is growing.

Hon. A. A. Barker, of Ebensburg, chairman of the Prohibition State Committee, was introduced and spoke with force and eloquence. He is one of the original abolitionists and labored with Wm. Lloyd Garrison and other such worthy and honored men. Mr. Barker is considered to be one of the most prominent advocates of prohibition in the State.

At 12 o'clock the convention adjourned until 1:45 p. m.—Bellefonte Daily News.

Conference of the thirteenth Congressional District.

Met at St. Mary's Pa., on Tuesday night and reached their twenty-sixth ballot without a result, there being one delegate absent from Mifflin, Union and Clinton counties each.

WHEN the Mason & Hamlin Company announced the accomplishment of a great improvement in Upright Pianos, which they would soon give to the public, much was expected, because of the vast improvements which had been effected by them in reed instruments, and the acknowledged superexcellence of their organs. These expectations are fully justified by the pianos which they are producing, which have extraordinary purity and refinement of tone. Every mechanic will see that the peculiarities of their construction must add greatly to their durability and especially their capacity to keep in good tune.

This company have as great a future in their pianos as they are already realizing in their organs, which are confessedly unequaled among such instruments.—Boston Traveller.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 30, 1884.

The attention of politicians hereabouts is largely turned towards Ohio just now, and the greatest interest centres in the campaign in that state. In no previous presidential campaign within my recollection has this been the case. Heretofore Ohio has been conceded in advance to the Republicans, and Indiana, a more doubtful State in the past, has been the focus of special interest at this stage of the contests. But now there is little question about Indiana, and the Republicans are scared nearly to death about one of their own States. Pension Commissioner Dudley has left his office and gone to Ohio to take charge of the corruption fund and direct the movements to buy the State. Having been first lieutenant under Dorsey in Indiana in 1880, he is considered well qualified for such a mission. Mr. Dudley resigned his office here because it was the wish of the Secretary of the Interior that he should do so. They have not been in accord for some time, and now Dudley goes to Ohio to work for Blaine, under promise from the latter that he shall have Teller's place if he succeeds in buying the necessary number of votes to carry that State.

I had a talk last evening with a gentleman who knows the inside plans of the Blaine managers and learned from him the plan upon which Dudley is to operate. The seven counties of Cuyahoga, Sandusky, Lucas, Erie, Hamlinton, Montgomery and Butler, which gave Mr. Hoadley 12,472 majority, have been selected as a special battle ground. In these seven counties there are 397 voting precincts, with an average of a fraction over 400 votes each. They also include every large city, except Columbus and Springfield. In each of these precincts a reliable worker is to be placed, and he is to be supplied with the amunitions of war, and each of these 397 workers is expected to make an average of forty "conversions." The arguments used to secure those conversions, are bribery and chicanery—the only weapons of the party in latter years. It is possible that by these means the Blaine managers may succeed in holding the State, If they don't the jig is up with them. If they do they will simply hold what has never been counted in the Democratic column, and will still be a mighty long ways from final success. The fact that there is such a scare about Ohio, shows the position and desperation of the Blaine cause. As Col. Dudley's resignation does not take effect until Nov. 10th he is doing all this dirty work while an officer of the Government, and as the head of the Pension Bureau he has taken with him as aides a large number of special agents, who are on the rolls of that office. Dudley would make a nice Secretary of the Interior—just as James. G. Blaine would make a sweet-scented President of the United States.

PHONO.

Chronic Dysentery.

Mr. James Brannan, Second avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "For two years I have been constantly troubled with a chronic diarrhœa, or dysentery, having had, on an average, from twenty to twenty-five passages every twenty-four hours, and every one bloody. I had thoroughly tried all the prominent physicians in Pittsburgh, was twice in the West Penn Hospital, the first time thirteen weeks, and though I left it much better, yet in five days I was as bad as ever. I then tried two other great doctors in this city, and one of them finally assured me I was not long for this world, and advised me to write to my friends about it. I next went to Dr. Hartman, without the least confidence that he could do anything for me. He examined me, smiled, and said, he could stop the bloody discharges in less than two weeks, which he did with PERUNA, and I have now been entirely well for several weeks, and never felt better in my lif, though I am still taking his PERUNA. I will take it whenever I need medicine.

Mr. Patrick Burns, Pittsburgh, writes: "I have suffered intensely from piles and chronic diarrhœa. I was treated by five of the best physicians and surgeons in the city of Pittsburgh, and with all grew constantly worse. Finally three of them said my only hope was an operation. This frightened me, and I went immediately to Dr. Hartman, who has entirely cured me with PERUNA. I have been at work now for three months, and never in my life felt better. Call and see me at corner of Twenty-seventh and Mulberry streets, Twelfth ward, Pittsburgh."

Mr. Patrick Cunningham, S. S, near Sidney street, Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "For five years I have suffered inexpressibly from internal and external piles. I have tried the best physicians of Pittsburgh and Allegheny without relief. I went to Dr. Hartman, who cured me without detention from work with PERUNA."

Charles Frank, of Emrichville, Jefferson county, Ohio, writes: "I had piles and fistula in ano for four years. I had suffered constantly with a discharge of matter from the parts, and sometimes from the contents of the bowels through it. I could not have borne it much longer. I had heard so much of the ill effects of a knife operation that I resolved to go to Dr. Hartman. He ridiculed the silly idea of cutting it, and at once performed his own original operation without the knife, and without pain. I am thoroughly cured, though of course I took PERUNA."

—Mr. H. G. Elder, the republican candidate for prothonotary for this county, was in town and surrounding country a few days this week, looking after stray republican votes. He is a very pleasant gentleman and it's a pity he is on the wrong side.

—We are requested to announce that a meeting will be held in the Lutheran church at this place next Sunday forenoon at 10 o'clock, in the interests of Mission work. The meeting will be conducted by Miss Puella E. Dornblaser, of Mackeyville, Clinton Co., who is a prominent organizer of Women's Missionary Societies. A full attendance is requested.

—In a letter from Geo. K. Weber, of Dempseytown, Venango Co., Pa., one of the readers of the JOURNAL he says that a few weeks ago he noticed an item in this paper about the two-pound potatoes, but that he has a potato in his store at present which weighs three pounds and 5 ounces, which was grown by Mr. Robert Reed of that place. That puts Venango ahead of Centre, at least in the potato question.

—OCTOBER is a good month for merchants to examine their stock of Dr. Kessler's Celebrated English Cough Medicine and include a winter's supply in their next order. The people have found out by experience that it can be relied on in all cases of croup, whooping cough, colds, and lung troubles of any nature, and will have it. A good article draws trade while worthless articles drive it away. It should be a source of satisfaction to a dealer as well, to know he is giving good honest value for money received. Money refunded to dissatisfied purchasers.

—Last week's Clinton Democrat gives the following account of an accident which befel Mr. Shadle, who is known to many of our readers as the former mail carrier between Millheim and Sugar valley:

Mr. Shadle, the mail carrier between here and Sugar Valley, while coming over this morning had the misfortune of meeting with a serious mishap. When at the "watering trough" his horse and wagon went over the bank, a distance of about thirty feet—landing among the rocks and brushes. The animal's back was broken and it had to be shot. The vehicle was also badly used up and Mr. Shadle himself did not escape without some injury. He had to foot it to town with his mail. Mrs. M. Q. White, who was in the vehicle when the accident happened, sustained several bruises.

—Mr. A. J. Harter informs us that their sales of harness recently had in Snyder county, were favored with remarkable success and their customers have since complimented them on the superior leather which is used in their goods. This certainly is a strong recommendation and persons needing anything in that line should without fail give Harter Bros. a trial. They will make public sale of first-class harness on Saturday October 11th, in their store on Main street. The public is invited to attend this sale and get bargains.

MR. EDITOR:—Just praise is a debt we owe, flattery only a gift. Statesmen are complimented with public banquets, warriors with costly swords, clergymen with service of plate, and editors with a-a-great many things. And now I propose to do a just thing, nay a proper thing by making mention of one meritorious name. Mr. Wm. S. Musser, the proprietor of the Millheim Hotel, with an eye strictly to the welfare of his own business, he yet never forgets that he is a gentleman and that those who place themselves under his care for the time being are always entitled to gentlemanly treatment. Both old and young are always ready to sound with praise the name of the urbane proprietor. JOHN H. SELL.
Philadelphia, Sept. 23rd, 1884.

—Mrs. Mary C. Edgar, wife of Rev. J. W. Edgar, died at her residence in Lincoln Co., Kansas, on the 16th of September, of typhoid fever.

The deceased was the daughter of Henry and Fanny Brown, and was born in Hamburg, Clinton county, Pa., Jan. 5, 1859. She lived with her parents a number of years at Wolf's Store, in Brush valley, and in the spring of 1879 moved with her parents to Aaronsburg. Nov, 30, 1879 she married her now deeply bereaved husband, J. W. Edgar. In Dec. 1879 she was converted under the labor of Rev. W. H. Stover. She joined the Evangelical Association of which she remained a faithful member until Sept. '83, when she joined the M. E. church of which she remained faith till death, and her soul was conveyed by the heavenly convoy to the mansion prepared for her. She leaves a husband, father, brothers and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss, but we mourn not as those who have no hope. Funeral services conducted by Rev. J. W. Manners, pastor, and Rev. W. B. Moody. ***

—Mr. John Kerstetter, Jr., still makes a business of doing special jobs at carpentry. John is really an expert at the business and has large experince, both in making out plans, specifications and drawings, as well as a practical workman. People who entrust their work into his hands can safely rely on having it done in best style at the lowest prices. tf

REV. WHITE'S CHURCH DEDICATED.—The new church at Siglerville, Mifflin Co., Pa., erected by a portion of Rev. J. W. White's congregation, was dedicated to the worship of the Lord, free of debt, on Sabbath, September 21. The day was pleasant and the attendance large. After crowding all the pews and aisles, at the morning service, many people could not obtain admission for want of room. Eight hundred dollars were subscribed, and six hundred of this amount paid in cash, to liquidate the indebtedness remaining on the church. Rev. Mr. Smith, of the Evangelical church, preached in the morning and Rev. J. J. Pearce, of the M. E. church, in the afternoon. At the close of the afternoon service the congregation rose and sung the doxology and dedicatory hymn, and the Rev. Mr. White offered the dedicatory prayer. The people went home rejoicing that they have a place of worship free of debt. The building is a very neat and substantial Gothic structure. The title of the property is made to the people of the congregation or a majority of the same without regard to their present or future name or ecclesiastical connection. The people feel profoundly that while it may be law, it is not justice, that a small minority of a congregation should possess all its property—a minority which perhaps paid little or nothing to secure the property—simply because they choose to submit to ecclesiastical control and supervision.—Bellefonte Daily News.

—DRUGGISTS all report a rapid and steadily increasing demand for McDonald's Celebrated Worm Powders. There is no secret or trick about their popularity. It is solely because people have become convinced through trial or hearing their neighbors say that they are the best and easiest to take vermifuge ever produced. Nasty, sickening, old-fashioned worm syrups won't sell. People demand McDonald's Celebrated Worm Powders, and won't have anything else, hence their sales are greater than all the other vermifuges combined. Dissatisfied purchasers can have their money refunded.

No more serious damage was done.

SHIN BONE.

—Dinges, Trumpfheller & Co., went east last Saturday and expect to buy a heavy stock of fall and winter goods. They are wide-awake business men and will make trade boom. Read what they have to say in another column reserved for their new advertisement.

One of the best evidences that the American people of this generation live better than their fathers did is found in the steady and rapid growth of the trade in tropical furits. It is not many years since the great majority of the people scarcely knew what a banana was, and considered oranges and lemons as luxuries to be afforded only the sick or on great occasions. Now, not only these, but other tropical fruits, are bought and eaten almost as generally and freely as apples, and the consumption of melons, peaches, pears, plums and berries is on the same universal and extensive scale.

The Model Husband at Work.

The Doodlebugs are going out of town. They are hastening for the train. Mr. Doodlebug is getting them off. He is full of business, as becomes the head of the family.

'Here, Emeline, take this little valise and the baby and go on. I'll catch up with you before you get to the station. Hold on, I'll just hook this hat box on your fingers. There now, that'll carry nicely; got the baby all right? Tommy, you and Billy and little sister run along with mother—great heavens, Emeline, don't let that child run across the street alone; take hold of his hand, can't you? Tommy, come back and get this umbrella and bag of lemons! Emeline! Emeline! You've forgotten the lunch basket. Billy, run here quick and take this lunch basket to your mother! Now, Emeline, do hurry, or you'll miss the train. Never mind the rest of the things; I'll carry them.'

Four minutes after Mrs. Emeline reaches the station, having wrestled all the way with a baby, three children and four packages. Mr. Doodlebug arrives, carrying a rattan cane weighing four ounces. He is so tired he has to go in to the smoking car and sleep all the way to the station.

The doodlebugs? Imaginary people? Not by a long chalk, my dear sir. They live right here in Burlington, and everybody knows them. No. I don't know that he is considered much more selfish than some of his neighbors. Mrs. Doodlebug thinks he is a model husband. Yes, I have heard some of her neighbors say she is a fool. But she isn't I don't think. She is a woman, and consequently loves her husband too well to club him with a couplin pin every once in a while for his own good. She would carry more things for him if she had more arms.

Bursting a Gun.

Those old enough to carry a loaded gun should be too old to play tricks with it. They also ought to be familiar with its use as to know that a slight resistance at the end of the muzzle will burst it, when fired. The following illustrations are suggestive as to the carelessness which arises from ignorance or foolhardiness:

In bravado a young man placed the muzzle of his fowling-piece under the water and fired the charge. The result was the bursting of the barrel near the breech and the mutilation of his hand.

Another placed and held the muzzle of his piece against a piece of plate window-glass and firing the charge—powder and bullet. The glass was shattered, so was the gun barrel.

Another instance was that of an experimenter who had heard that a candle could be fired from the barrel of a gun through an inch board.

He drove a candle in to the muzzle of the gun, fired, and the explosion split the barrel almost its entire length, and did not even drive the candle from the muzzle.

Still another burst of a gun barrel was caused by the use of wet grass for a wad, well rammed down over a charge of shot.

Poison in Postal Notes.

The Old Style Discarded to Get Rid of the Green Ink.

The U. S. Post-office Department is issuing a new style of postal note. It is of the same size as the old one, but differs in color and in the method of indicating the number of dollars to be paid. The old one was made of bright yellow paper, with a broad design on the back printed in green. The amount to be paid was indicated by punching figures in the margin. The new one is made of paper of a faded lilac color, and is printed in black on the face and in blue on the back. The number of dollars is indicated by the number of stubs attached to it after it is torn from the book.

The chief reason for making the change was the poisonous character of the ink on the back of the notes. Supt. Pimley, of the money-order department, in the New York office, said that one of the clerks had noticed, some time ago, after handling a large number of the notes, when his fingers were moist, that the ink rubbed off and eventually the fingers became swollen. He thereafter used rubber tips when handling them. A business man also complained, one day, that after handling seventy of the notes, during which he wet his fingers at his mouth, his lips swelled up and were painful. A clerk in the department at Washington was similarly afflicted.

The new notes will entirely supersede the old ones in a few weeks. All danger in handling any number of the old ones can be avoided by cleanliness while at work.

An eccentric old bachelor who died lately at Easton, Pa., left $50,000 for the erection of a monument over his grave, also $10,000 for the maintenance of a brass band to bear his name, and at each anniversary of death to play a dirge at his grave.

At Sea in a Basket.

It was upon September 20, 1854, the Arctic, belonging to the now extinct Collins line, sailed from Liverpool to New York with more than 200 passengers on board. The voyage was safely accomplished until the Arctic got within 65 miles of Cape Race, when she was ran into by the Vesta, a small iron steamer owned and manned by a French man, and of about 100 tons burden. Within four hours of the collision the big vessel disappeared beneath the waves, and the little vessel was speeding on her way toward the French coast where, unconscious of the mischief she had done, she arrived in safety about a fortnight later. About 400 of the Arctic's crew and passengers were saved in a boat and a few more were picked up from rafts and bits of the vessel, among the latter being Captain Luce and Mr. Smith, then a resident of the State of Mississippi, but subsequently a wealthy Glasgow merchant. Mr. Smith was saved upon a ratt of planks, lashed together by himself, on the top of which he tied the basket, lined with tin, into which unwashed plates were put during the saloon dinner. Upon the edge of the basket, with his feet at the bottom, Mr. Smith sat for two nights and nearly three days, bailing as it filled from time to time. It will be heard with little surprise that for many years Mr. Smith preserved this much-valued historical basket as a trophy in his drawing-room at Glasgow, and showed it to his friends as the vehicle in which he floated upon the waves for fifty or sixty hours.

DOWNS' ELIXIR.

N. H. DOWNS'

Vegetable Balsamic

ELIXIR

For the cure of

Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Catarrh, Croup, Asthma, Pleurisy, Hoarseness, Influenza, Spitting Blood, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Throat, Chest, and Lungs. In all cases where this Elixir is used its efficacy is at once manifested, convincing the most incredulous that is not incurable, if properly attended to.—At its commencement it is but a slight irritation of the membrane which covers the Lungs; then an inflamation, when the cough is rather dry, local fever, and the pulse more frequent, the cheeks flushed and chills more common. This Elixir in curing the above complaints, operates so as to remove all morbid irritations and inflamation from the lungs to the surface, and finally expel them from the system. It facilitates expectoration.

It heals the ulcerated surfaces and relieves the cough and makes the breathing easy. It supports the strength and at the same time reduces the fever. It is free from strong opiate and astringent articles, which are of so drying a nature as to be in great danger of destroying the patient; whereas this medicine never dries or stops the cough, but, by removing the CAUSE, consequently, when the cough is cured the patient is well. Price 35 cts., 50 cts., and $1.00 per bottle.
